MENSCH UND HUND AUF EINEM WEG

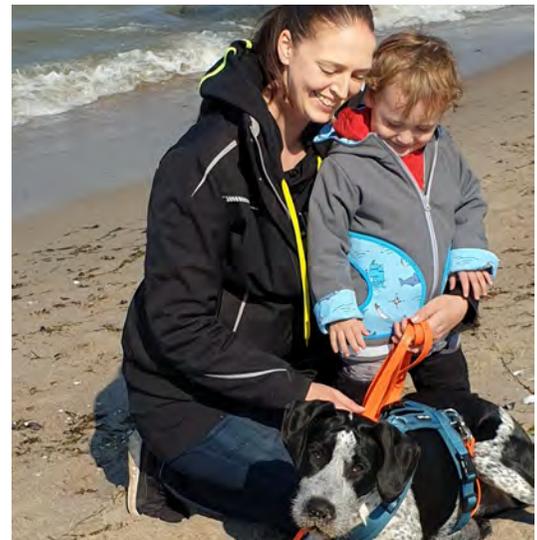

The common path of humans and dogs began about 35,000 years ago. To this day, dogs support us humans to the best of their ability, whether in "normal" life as companions or as work colleagues, such as rescue dogs, search dogs, therapy companion dogs, guide dogs for the blind, etc. They are used by most owners - and by many of us - as companions. They are considered by most owners - adults and children - to be a complete member of the family.

Humans and dogs can live very harmoniously together, have "a good connection" with each other. In rare cases this succeeds all by itself. But - humans and dogs speak two different languages, mutual understanding has to be learned. What kind of activities does my own dog like - because he is completely different from my girlfriend's dog. He has different preferences and a different personality. To learn and experience this, there are professional dog schools that should be visited with the four-legged family member. Here you can get information on how a dog learns, what language it actually speaks and how we humans can communicate with it.

CHILDREN AND DOGS TOGETHER, GROWING TOGETHER, AVOIDING RISKS

In families with a child and a dog, parents have their hands full. The dog also demands a lot of attention and time. Everyone in the family has their own relationship with the dog and the dog always reacts and communicates differently. Children have their own interests and expectations. They often think that the family dog always understands them correctly when they give it signs or talk to it. The dog, however, does not understand them - feels uncomfortable, is irritated.

You cannot yet really empathise with the dog or put yourself in its situation and cannot think like it. Some dogs have the right intuition to deal with children carefully and appropriately - others urgently need an interpreter (parents, dog trainers), someone who can support them, protect them and oversee situations.

Kinder und Hunde brauchen in Familien einen art- und altersgerechten Umgang, der zu der jeweiligen Entwicklungsstufe beider passt.

Eltern sind für das Wohl beider verantwortlich. Je jünger das Kind, umso wichtiger ist der Schutz des Kindes. Mit dem Alter des Kindes wächst auch seine Handlungsfähigkeit unter Anleitung.

Eltern und Kinder zu schulen, zu beraten und auch Unterstützung zu geben, ist die beste Prävention, um das Risiko von Unfällen zu minimieren.

Dringender Rat: Beratung vor und bei dem Hundekauf, bei der Welpenerziehung, bei der Erziehung und auch bei Fragen zum Verhalten des Hundes.

GROWING SUSTAINABLY WITH & ON EACH OTHER

Children love to play in the mud, climb and romp outside. They also love being with animals, caring for them and talking to them. They love nature! Living with dogs can be a wonderfully positive experience for children. However, we adults must take full responsibility in this, for the good of the child and also the dog. Only then will both sides have a lasting added value in the experience.
